INTRODUCTION

The Barossa Valley is Australia's richest and best known viticultural and winemaking region. Comprising the historic Barossa Valley and Eden Valley, it is located one hour's drive north of the city of Adelaide in the State of South Australia. The Barossa's special appeal is that it is much more than Australia's best known wine region. It is a richly textured, multi-layered cultural icon based on years of tradition, creative energy and community pride.

The Barossa invites you to share in the abundant generosity of this community by tasting the wines, enjoying the food and visiting the many attractions.

The history of the Barossa reflects the philosophical dream of South Australia as a haven of the 19th century free enterprise and religious and political freedom.

South Australia was a planned free settlement, designed by London's philanthropists who saw an opportunity for honest hardworking men and women to establish a new life.

Soon after the colony was proclaimed in 1836, George Fife Angas, the founder and chairman of the South Australian Company, instructed a German mineralogist Johann Menge to survey the ranges north of the infant city of Adelaide. The region was named Barossa by the colony's Surveyor-General Colonel William Light, after the site of a victory by the English over the French in the Spanish Peninsula War. Misspelling on later maps gave it the unique Australian name, Barossa.

In 1842, two and a half years after the first German settlers arrived in South Australia, a congregation of over 200 dissident Lutherans made the journey to the Barossa from the provinces of Silesia, Brandenburg and Posen. Here they developed a typical Prussian Village named Bethany.

Subsequent waves of German speaking settlers started other villages such as Langmeil and Light Pass while English free settlers tended to settle in the town of Angaston.

Self sufficiency was important, and as a result the peasant experience of smoking meats, preserving fruits and making cheeses flourished. Fine music was an integral part of Lutheran worship and the English culture.

Above all, wine became a basic part of life for the Lutheran settlers and the grape growing developed as a fundamental agricultural activity. The wealth of the English gentry sponsored the development of a commercial wine industry in the 1850's and 1860's but the real growth took place from the 1880's onwards. The Barossa wine industry developed along a different route from the traditional European practice of grower/winemakers. Although some growers did make wine for their own use, the majority sold grapes to the wineries.

The Barossa's strength and success has come from this specialization. Its pool of 540 expert vignerons have blended their 150 year knowledge of the land and its climate with modern viticultural practice, creating a partnership with the wineries whose specialist skills make the most of the superb fruit.

Here in the Barossa, you will find today's life-style and hospitality blends comfortably with the architecture and memories of the past.
